Once upon a time. by Frank Lloyd

Much has been made of the Bohemians of early day Carmel-by-the-Sea, their life style, their colorful personalities, their differences with the established mores of their society and times, hence the term which set them apart as a group from the grocers, inn-keepers, teamsters and carpenters who made up a necessary part of the small primary population.

Jack London comes up as a point of reference most frequently, and in spite of his relatively tenuous claim to being an early member of the displaced, who, forced from a destroyed San Francisco of 1906, found haven here amid the oaks and pines, bathed by sea breezes and summer fogs, he never stopped here long.

A considerable part of Jack London's claim to our imagination and of those of previous times was his youthful exuberance, his espousal of the Socialist cause, his entry into all modes of earning a living in the rough and tumble of gold mining in Alaska, oyster smuggling on San Francisco Bay, venturing as a crewman on the cruel North Pacific in the treacherous and killing days of sail.

Jack's books of adventure and his untimely death gave much to this aura.

In literature, while he is still widely read in Russia, today his style seems boyish, and truly this was the trait that must have endeared him to so many; that and the fact he was forever young, even in death only party worn out through abuse and neglect of his enormously vital body.

There were also those other Bohemians, most of whom lived in Carmel for much longer periods than Jack London ever did. He was a bird of passage, with many friends here, but his reasons for moving on are so well told in "Valley of the Moon." In this he not only portrays accurately and in detail the Bohemian Carmel scene following the earthquake of 1906, but weaves a romantic story of his discovery of Sonoma, the valley of the moon, to be his love and tragedy in that place among the redwoods

The others here were topped by Jimmy Hopper, who became their dean and ultimately surviving member of the original cast. Hopper brought wife and children here. He bought the original home here of George Sterling, the flamboyant San Francisco poet, descendant of Sag Harbor whaling people. And Hopper always returned here after forays abroad as a newspaperman and writer.

The list of the Bohemians' names is not too long, but well known, principally through the volumn "Seacoast of Bohemia", which is reasonably accurate.

one of those, nowever, seldom given mention for his membership in the Carmel literary community then was a man named Michael Williams. Now he was an unusual man, a former newspaperman also, who brought a wife and two children here, and presented a relatively more stable image.

Although a small child at the time I knew Mike Williams, but he appears vague in memory, a kind of grey figure of a man, and also his wife, a pleasant mother, who to me were parents of two children, both older at the time than I, who attracted me more than the rest of the Hopper girls, Beth and Marianne, the Princess, Louise and David, Connie Heron and the others who shared for a brief spell a kind of school under the canvas roof of a typical Carmel tent house.

Tippy Williams, the son, was a lovable sort, some now say possibly not too bright, while the girl, Marnie we called her, was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen. She had delicate features, large and thoughtful eyes, auburn hair in braids about her head, and in my childish way I loved her then and I still love the memory reinforced by one of those brown and faded snapshots of this little girl in the American Indian costume of an old Forest Theater play, probably "The Arrowmaker" by Mary Austin, in which my father acted as Tavots, wearing leather costume and brandishing a wooden dagger he made himself.

The father of my friends, was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Feb. 5, 1877. He was in college in Canada when his father died. Penniless he left school, abandoned his Catholicism, went to Boston and attempted to survive as a writer and poet. He soon went to work for the Boston Post, then moved on to the N.Y. World and Evening Telegram before coming west.

Mike Williams was named city editor of the San Francisco Examiner on the eve of the earthquake and fire of 1906, (a job, incidentally, since held by Carmel-born and raised John Todd), and so Carmel was the natural next landing place with all the other gifted refugees. What happened here shows that Williams was not one of the crowd and that showed his independence in thought and action. Perhaps his wife being a New Englander feeling a cut above the colorful Bohemians, steered his course elsewhere.

Their home was built just west of where Viscaino and Flanders Way meet, and still stands, saved not long ago from a building inspector's edict that it was to be brought up to code or razed.

The trail down the canyon behind the house was then clear and open, passed below the Sterling-Hopper house off Torres Street, and on down to the Mission then standing in poor condition with derelict and melting adobe walls in front, symbols of the poor Indians who were rounded up and pressed into a sort of slavery to make those raw adobe bricks.

No doubt this trail and the Mission below had something to do with restoring Williams to his original Catholicism and he was reconverted during his stay in Carmel. He went on to found and become the first editor of the magazine Commonweal, 1924-37, in New York, a lay journal which included distinguished contributors outside his church. He died in the east Oct. 12, 1950.

While here, Williams wrote "The Book of the High Romance" in 1918; and after leaving here in 1926, "The Little Flower of Carmel."

That beautiful little daughter of his? She was his other gift to the church. "The Little Flower of Carmel" became a nun and Carmel's late Gertrude Rendtorff kept in touch with her for many years, during which for a while she was cloistered at the monastery at San Jose creek south of Carmel, She became Mother Margaret R.S.C.J.

We better take you home partner, 'Cause I don't think you can handle any more of this Carmel night-life."

Church parking

Dear Editor:

"When there is no felt obligation to listen, the freedom of speech becomes a trivial right." Sydney J. Harris said it in The Herald two days after the last meeting of Carmel's City Council.

Each Councilman attending that meeting had in hand a copy of a petition countaining 283 signatures. The expressed desire of 283 local citizens and of the Business Association were ignored.

The petition asked for revision in the Sunday parking restrictions to enable churchgoers the privilege of attending services without receiving citations for overparking. One Councilman and the President of the Business Association pointed out that, not only churchgoers, but other Carmelites who traditionally enjoy Sunday breakfast or brunch in the village are no longer able to indulge this habit.

One Councilman said that he'd heard only one complaint against the present restrictions. He had in his hand 283 complaints, but they didn't count. The Chief of Police. claimed that he had heard only one or two complaints. One Councilman suggested that churchgoers could park at Sunset Center - four to seven uphill blocks away from the three affected churches.

The Mayor, with obvious relish, told the County Registrar of Voters that Carmel preferred to remain quaintly without house numbers, no matter how much this might confound the county's computers.

Carmel's quaint village status is fast becoming a farce. Sunday parking citations are restrictive and citified.

Surely we can still maintain some semblance of the old Carmel freedom for residents on one day a week, even if it means they must take their chances against tourist-shoppers for parking space while attending church or patronizing local breakfast and luncheon spots!

Most of the Councilmen claim they've heard no complaints. Since they can't hear 283 names on paper nor the voice of the Business Association, how about you — the people — telling them, loud and clear, what you think? It is your freedom of speech at stake. So far, City Hall feels no obligation to listen.

Energy

Dear Editor,

More and more we read and hear of the seriousness of the petroleum shortage here in America. Frankly, there are a good many of us who believe that this whole fuel shortage has been deliberately contrived by special interest groups.

You may wonder why we think that. For one reason, we know that Adolph Hitler and his Nazis operated a war. machine largely on synthetic gasoline. Yet, we hear very little talk of synthetic gasoline as a solution to the so-called * fuel shortage

In his new book, "Wall Street And The Rise of Hitler." by Antony C. Sutton, formerly of the Hoover Institute at Stanford, Sutton documents convinvingly the fact that Hitler got the formulas and the processes for making synthetic gasoline as the result of the combined research and efforts of the L.G. Farben Company and the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey: /

It seems reasonable to many of us that if they made synthetic gasoline to run the Nazi war machine, they could make synthetic gasoline to solve this so-called fuel shortage here in America. Is it any wonder that a good many of us believe that they do not really want to solve the problem? It seems that they really want to perpetuate it.

Emergency praise

Dear Editor:

Recently, in two different emergencies I called Carmel Fire Department for an ambulance. The service was not only immediate and efficient but also free of charge. This letter is in praise of these ten to fifteen young people (some of them just out of high school) who donate their time to take courses and training at the Community Hospital and then arrange their schedules in order to volunteer for the service. Of course, they must be ready day and night, sometimes answering as many as eight or nine ambulance calls in twentyfour hours. Once a month all of them meet for drill at the Fire Station. From my experience on at least one occasion their promptness and skill undoubtedly saved the life of my sister, and I want to give a big THANK YOU to these volunteers.

Forest Theater: facing the future

By DAVID COLE

In a concave hillside five blocks, from the center of town, in a deep growth of pines and live oaks, lies Forest Theater. It's a serene and beautiful setting for an outdoor theater, but that its inception.

The actions being taken by the city council now in regards to this historic site may mark the beginning of a new era for the theater, or just another false start.

in the past, the council is now taking a close look at the decaying facilities and the misused grounds of Forest Theater. A survey is currently underway by Neill Engineers and a landscape architect has been retained to draw up a master plan for the theater's environs.

History

It all started easily enough, back in 1909 when Herbert Heron talked the Carmel Development serenity belies the problems ('ompany into donating the and controversies that have, land for use as an outdoor swirled around the Forest theater. Despite the fact that Theater in the 67 years since there was no electricity in Carmel in those days, the early years of the theater were immensely successful.

The theater opened with "David," an unpublished drama by Constance Skinner in July 1910. In a village of As has happened so often 300, actors for 15 speaking parts were found with little trouble.

> Times change. Improvements for the theater costly, perbecame formances more infrequent, and the management of the theater for many years was up in the air.

In 1963 city clerk A.H. At the same time, Car- Plaxton wrote: "No firm determination has ever been made regarding responsibility, custodianship. financial responsibility or Forest Theater. Noting that various city departments called the theater "an orphan" among city facilities.

The theater has been called worse names. During one of the many fights over whether to renovate the decrepit facilities in the theater, renovation schemes were likened to "putting money down a rat hole (1971)."

The improvements did go they were usually piecemeal and few went through without a fight.

As mentioned, the theater's inception was much smoother than its maintenance. Not only did the Carmel Development Company donate the land (about 15 Carmel lots), they also helped in clearing away the heavy underbrush on the site. The original plan, with setting stage topographic contours still exists in the city's building department files, with the name John Bashy in the lower right corner.

of the theater and in 1929 when the WPA performed $25,000 worth of work in laying the concrete slab with reinforced steel beneath the present building.

In 1937 the Carmel Club of Arts and Crafts signed the deed for Forest Theater over to the city, "for public park and playground purposes. This phrase later led some to on over the years, however -claim that the theater should be abandoned and the area turned into a recreation center, but the deed also specifies, "Use would include and continue outdoor theatre performances of said park," and a legal judgement made years later said the city was not, by its theatrical activities in Forest Theater, violating the deed in any way.

The city accepted the theater, but a report on its condition noted: "Decay and termites have done their work and many of the mud sills can be torn to pieces with the fingers." The report doubted that the stage could withstand a large load.

Monterey Peninsula College is facing some very serious problems. A group of teachers are suing the School on behalf of part-time faculty, costs of maintaining current programs are steadily rising, the burden of property taxes to support these costs is already too heavy, and there is growing public dissatisfaction with the system of teacher tenure.

The Governing Board must establish goals and priorities which would assist in resolving the part-time teacher issue and insure that the School operates effectively without increasing property taxes. A committee of faculty and administrators should be formed to work with the Board on modifying the current tenure system. Criteria for tenure should assure the security and advancement of effective teachers and allow for the dismissal of those who abuse their positions.

Recently I retired as an Army colonel. As director of four major language learning centers in the U.S. (including the Presidio of Monterey) and extensive language training programs abroad, I've had to face virtually all challenges posed by institutes of higher education.

I've commanded various tactical units under combat and peacetime conditions; yet approximately one third of my career was spent in academic environments. As a result I appreciate the concerns of students, faculty, and administration.

I've served on the Higher Education Committee for the Monterey Peninsula, and I've been a student in night classes at MPC. These experiences have given me some personal insight into the problems our College faces, and I know I can help in reaching solutions.

CARVEL BALDWIN, president of the Forest Theater Guild.

BY BARBARA CAMERA

Six years ago, when the fate of the Forest Theater was very uncertain; wellknown director Cole Weston urged those persons "interested in good theater on a great open-air stage" to attend a meeting in the facility's behalf.

Forty-five people gathered on that Sunday afternoon in July following a piano-violin concert at the open-air. theater. This meeting marked the re-establishment of the Forest Theater Guild after many years of inacthvity. Its immediate purpose was to develop a plan to enable the historic theater's operation to continue.

The city council had been expressing grave doubts about the future existence of the Forest Theater. The facility required repairs and improvements, but several council members were reluctant to allocate funds since the main stage was only used about 10 days a year during the summer for free events.

The newly re-formed Guild swung into action. Weston, who had served previously as president of the organization, was again elected to this position. Barbara Norberg was named as vice p-resident. Dory Kercheral was chosen secretary and Anita Endicott, treasurer. A ninemember board was named and various committees, including membership and play reading, were set up. The group began to formulate a plan for theater use to present at an upcoming cultural commission meeting. The Guild rapidly gained momentum and membership grew. Within a month, members totalled more than 100 persons from 12 California cities.

When the cultural commission met in August to discuss the fate of the venerable theater, the Guild presented its proposal. The Forest Theater Guild would lease the theater on a onedollar-per-year-basis. It would take over the summer Sunday programs traditionally presented at the Forest Theater and would keep the facility clean. Profits would be split with provements and maintenance. The Guild would receive preferential treatment in scheduling use of the theater.

Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night" was selected to be staged in July, a very appropriate choice since that same play was one of the first to be presented at the theater more than 60 years earlier. Veteran Shakespearean director Charles Thomas was named to direct the production. The July run proved very successful, drawing 3500 persons - a record audience for the theater. In the fall of 1972, the Guild announced plans for an expanded Shakespearean program for the following summer. The Forest Theater Guild was well on its way to proving both itself and the theater in its two-year trial period.

The second season was even more successful than the first, "Richard III" and

"Much Ado About Nothing" was held over for three additional performances. The Guild has met with success each season since that two-year trial period.

Formed originally about 27 years ago by Herbert Heron, the Forest Theater Guild had been very active during the 1950's. Some of its productions had included "Lysistrata," "Playboy of the Western World," "Ondine," and "As You Like It." Its last production at the theater was in 1960 and the Guild "retired" until 1971 when it was re-activated to save the Forest Theater.

This year marks the organization's sixth year in strictly Shakespearean productions and, according to the group's president Carvel Baldwin, the Guild has been operating successfully in the black every year, just as it did when it was first formed.

A benefit performance of Federico Fellini's film, "The Clowns," followed by a champagne party, was staged. Then, in November, Dame Judith Anderson, who had a special fondness for the Forest Theater, appeared on the open air stage and presented a selection of readings in another benefit per-formance. She had performed at the Forest Theater 30 years before in the first Carmel production of "Tower Beyond Tragedy."

In January, 1972, the city council reached a verdict. The Guild was granted two years to prove that the Forest Theater could function smoothly and attract audiences: The Guild would pay 10 per cent of its gross profits to the city as rent; the rest of its revenues would be put back into productions and used to secure top talent. Monterey Peninsula College

Having been a member of Monterey Peninsula College Board of Trustees for the past 12 years, I have seen MPC grow from approximately 4,500 students in 1965 to over 11,000 in 1976. This growth and the building program to accommodate this growth has been accomplished with a very small raise in the tax rate, from 52 cents in 1965, to 55 cents in 1976. MPC provides the means for the education and development of all facets of our community, from high school students to housewives. MPC has a strong transfer program, an excellent vocational program and programs for those seeking self enrichment. I would like to continue as a member of the Board which has worked hard at keeping the tax rate down and educational attainments high. I request your support and vote on March 8, 1977.

Harry Tsugawa

Preserving the beauty that's there

The greatest enemy of landscaping is Man.

That's the reality of it, says landscape architect Harry Tsugawa, the man the city is retaining to help in the renovation of Forest Theater.

"For instance, the human foot acts as one of the world's best compaction units," Tsugawa relates. "A spiked heel has the force of a sledge hammer on the soil. Compaction from feet keeps the water and air out of the ground, thus retarding root growth."

Tsugawa also looks at the way cars are parked every which way under the trees at Forest Theater and says the ground there has turned hard as concrete.

"The biggest problem at Forest Theater," he says, "is that it's been beaten to death by people and cars."

The solution is to channel and guide people so they don't destroy their environment, yet can fully enjoy the beauty of the theater and its setting.

Tsugawa says it is far too early to predict what will be done to the theater grounds, but he says they must be handled in a very sensitive manner.

"If we're not careful," he says, "we could destroy the beauty of what's already there."

Tsugawa never rushes into any job. He regards a person's garden or landscaping as a very personal thing. When he contracts with a private homeowner for a landscape job, he first sits down with them to gain some rapport.

"If I can't establish communication with a client," he says, "I would rather not do a job."

Tsugawa spent a day just wandering around the Flanders-Doolittle Park before he even began thinking about where to put the fire road the city had contracted him to design.

A graduate of the University of California in 1958, Tsugawa worked for five years in Berkeley and then for two in San Francisco. But he became tired of the urban grind and the commute to work, so when a job as landscape architect for the yet unbuilt UC Santa Cruz campus opened up, he went for

In Oct. 1964, when Tsugawa began work in Santa Cruz, there was only one building under construction on the campus. In the seven years he served as campus architect, Tsugawa worked with some of the best names in architecture.

"It was a remarkable experience," he says.

Tsugawa acted mainly as the university's representative in contract negotiations. When the financial crises hit the universities, and landscaping became largely routine, he moved on to his own private practice in Santa Cruz, just five minutes from his home.

It was at the university that Tsugawa first noticed the heavy effect of man on landscaping. Although the students were in the midst of an ecological awareness campaign, Tsugawa found paths and shortcuts through every imaginable part of the silvan university grounds.

"Landscape architecture is hard," Tsugawa says, "for that reason and others. When you build a house you don't have to worry about the door growing."

Tsugawa says you have to think positively in landscaping when you stick that small plant in the soil. It is usually five to eight years before landscaping matures and you can see the results of your work.

On the other hand, there are great rewards.

"Landscaping is never static," he points out. "It has both yearly and seasonal changes."

It is a little bit, perhaps, like giving birth, because the creation goes on to have a life of its own.

Carmel School Board Election Statement of James I. Miller

Date: February 24, 1977

After much thought and consideration, I am today announcing the withdrawal of my candidacy for re-election to the Governing Board of the Carmel Unified School District. In January of this year, after serving on this board for some 71/2 years, I announced my intention to not seek re-election for the 1977-1981 term of office. After making this announcement, I became increasingly concerned over the lack of interest in other qualified members of the community to seek this vacated position. As the only existing member on the present board coming from a businessmanagement background, I was especially interested in seeing that some qualified business person be elected. On the next to the last day for filing, there were no candidates filed who in my opinion had this kind of background. For this reason I was encouraged to file for re-election.

Mr. Edward Reilly, who is the controller for a large local publishing firm and a resident of Carmel Valley, filed for election on the last day of filing. I have come to know Mr. Reilly since that time and believe that he is highly qualified to fill the need for a management-oriented person on the board. Since it was not my original intention to run for the board this year, and because of other pressing needs and committments which I have, I feel that my personal needs and the needs of the Carmel Unified School District can be best met by my withdrawal from the election, and endorsement of Mr. Edward Reilly for my vacated position on the board and of Mrs. Fran Gaver for re-election to her incumbent position on the board.

Sincerely,

James I. Miller Member Carmel Unified School District

CARMEL WOMEN IN PEACE MOVE

The next meeting of the Carmel branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom will be held at the home of Dr. Amelia Gates on El Camino Real between Seventh and Eighth on Sunday evening, March sixth. Austin Lewis of San Francisco will speak on "The Situation in China." The public is cordially invited. The Carmel branch was formed two weeks ago, at the call of Miss Anne Martin, regional director of the National Association. At that meeting Mrs. Esther Teare was elected chairman of the group and Miss Mary Bulkley, secretary-treasurer.

At the call of Miss Anne Martin, regional director of the national association, on the evening of Sunday, February 20th, a group of Carmel women met at the house of Dr. Amelia Gates and formed a local branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. This group is to be affiliated with the Northern California division of the national group. The chairman of the International is Jane Addams and of the National, Hannah Clothier Hull, of Washington D.C. The league has organized sections in more than 24 countries and is now in its twelfth year of service.

"The basic belief of the league is that people are not obliged to choose between violence and a passive acceptance of unjust conditions, but that intelligence and good will, if given opportunity to function, will go far toward solving the problems of the world. They put especial stress on the necessity for meeting our present wrong educational methods, even from the cradle, and substituting social for competitive motives. They even stress in early infancy doing away with militaristic toys, stories, and games.

They realize they will be pityingly called impractical dreamers, but answer with the fact that all so called Christian nations give lip service at least to the Sermon on the Mount, an ethic quite as 'impractical' "

A telegram remonstrating against sending U.S. forces into Nicaragua and China and asking that he use every effort toward arbitration with these countries and with Mexico was ordered sent to the President of the U.S.

PRIZES ANNOUNCED FOR 20th KITE FESTIVAL, MARCH 22

Birds will hunt cover, March 22, when Carmel's confetti kite cloud takes possession of the sky. For the twentieth consecutive season winged dragons, bats, cats and feathered fish will rip from their fashioner's hands to breast the wild March winds, in the annual kite festival on the High School football field.

Founded in 1932 by the late Reverend William G. White, active promoter of youth projects, Carmel's Kite Festival now is sponsored by Carmel Lions Club, prize donators, and stage managed by Ernest Calley, rule-legislator for the competitive features of the

Each kite must be fashioned by the hand of its flier, and each flier must limit himself to one kite and one event. No kite will be judged by its beauty alone, but must demonstrate adequate flight ability.

PROPOSE BUSINESS LICENSE INCREASE

Whether business license fees should be revised in order to bring in added revenue for Carmel will be considered at the city council meeting on Wednesday night.

"It is felt not unreasonable to suggest that with a registered population of 4,850 persons, and having over 600 gross business licenses in effect, with an annual gross in excess of $2 million, also over 1,200 business licenses of all classifications, the business community presently established in Carmel creates a greater demand for city services than do home owning residents," is a statement in a report prepared for the council by the city's administrative staff.

Basketball

Padres take regionals -- on to sectionals

By NANCY FLEMING

The Carmel High Padres have now lived up to all the expectations that have been placed on them this basketball season. In the semi-finals of the Region IV playoffs the Padres overwhelmed a smaller, less experienced team, Fremont Christian, the winner of the Christian Schools Athletic League, defeating them 80-

Helping pull Carmel through the game that sent the Padres on to win the Region IV title for the second year in a row was senior forward Steve Talley. New to Carmel this year. Talley was named best defensive player at Clovis High School last 'year and has been a definite asset to the Padres squad this year. He was the high scorer of the game with 18 points - and grabbed numerous rebounds'to spur the Padres on to victory. Carmel's Bill Colohan who has had trouble with his left shoulder in the past had to be taken out of the game in the third quarter when he reinjured it. Carmel, however, did not falter but continued to run over the Fremont Warriors, outscoring them 42.22 the second half.

The championship match in which Carmel played Seaside (who previously defeated Aptos in the semifinals) was held last Saturday night at Hartnell College in Salinas. It was slated to be a most exciting game but was reduced to another typical Carmeldominating contest, the Padres 50-37 yictory easily sewn up in the first quarter, when the score was Carmel-20 Seaside-1. Needless to say the Spartans had a slow start, missing shots and carelessly losing control of the ball.

It was the Padres tight defense that won the game for them. Seaside could not penetrate the incredible zone defense Carmel imposed upon them. Again it was Steve Talley with 12 points and excellent defensive moves that helped keep the Padres intensity overpowering. Bill Colohan, although still bothered by his shoulder injury, and guard Dan Struges had outstanding defensive games.

Carmel (24-2) will be at Stanford March 4 and 5 competing in the Central Coast Sectional Playoffs. The other three teams are: Region I champion Mitty High (23-5), Region II champion Monte Vista (25-2) and Region III champion Del Mar (27-1).

Radio station KIDD will carry the Padres' Stanford games live, begining Friday night at 6:45 p.m. other things. The theater was rewired in 1955, but in 1956 city clerk Larry Rose shows just how much still needed doing in his letter to the Forest Theater Guild stating that the condition of theater, "has deteriorated to a deplorable degree." The council agreed and approved maintenance and repair work. In 1959 seats were also installed in the Little Theater.

In 1960 the state fire marshall came down hard on the city for the dangerous condition of the theater and a vear later $5000 was approved to bring it up to standards. In 1966 a storage building was erected on the grounds and in 1967 a projection booth was put up. In 1973 the city put up the scene dock. In 1975 a light tower was added.

But most of the work was piecemeal and there exists some confusion as to who did what when. The present city council, for instance, has approved about $1500 worth for Neil Engineers to survey and draw up a topographic map for the

The future

There's little doubt that, as cultural director Tyler says, both the Children's Experimental Theatre and the Forest Theater Guild "are working under certain handicaps at Forest Theater."

Benches are rotting,

Last year at budget time. the city council marked $20,000 for the improvement of Forest Theater, to be spread over a four year period. The action was no more specific than that, but the intention seemed to be council by spring or sumfor a planned, com- mer. prehensive program of

Early spring in the Ventana

THE WARM WEATHER combined with our light rains has brought us an early Spring. Wildflowers, though scarce, are evident in the woods now. We took a walk in the Ventana Wilderness Area and found red Indian paint brush, thimble berries peeking out of rock ledges, lupine, wild cucumber, golden poppies and vines of morning glories. Buds on bushes and trees, and even the fungi, as well as the flowers seemed to appreciate the recent rains. Walking among the redwoods and pines, with the fragrance of bay permeating the air and the sounds of a stream gently flowing made the drought seem far away.

"The Forest Theater Guild has given the Peninsula good theater," says Baldwin.

The 1977 program again includes "Twelfth Night," to be directed by Richard Geer from the Colorado Art Festival. The second production will be "Romeo and Juliet." Carmelite Peter Magee has been named director of this play. Patricia Norman is the producer this year.

Although when the Guild initially re-activated in 1971 it had contemplated offering a program of classics, original plays and even musicals, the group soon changed its direction and concentrated solely on the Bard.

"There are two other areas along the coast that have strictly Shakespearean troupes," explains Baldwin, "They're in San Francisco and San Diego. Carmel is the only area in between to have such a theater."

Baldwin, who also serves as the Guild's financial adviser, credits several facets for the Guild's successful past and bright future. Among these are a receptive public, a city council that's culturally attuned, and the Guild's executive committee, which has a strong financial and business background.

Other officers of the 150member Forest Theater Guild are Ramon Wilson, vice president; Jeff Huddleson, secretary; Patricia Norman, treasurer; and

THE SERRA PAGEANTS were an important part of the early dramatic efforts in Carmel.

LYSISTRATA was produced on the Forest Theater stage in the early days.

Philip Oberg, legal consultant.

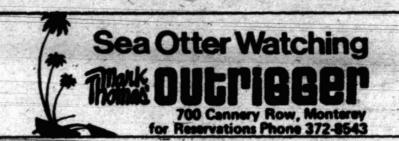

Baldwin views the Forest Theater as a great asset to Peninsula culture. It would be nice, he points out, to have some improvements done, such as replacing the stage wood that has dry rot, enlarging the scene dock, and improving the uncomfortable seats. But Baldwin strongly believes the atmosphere of the Forest Theater should be maintained.

"It's very important," he emphasizes, "to keep the rustic, restful feeling of the open-air theater."

All Fictitious Business Name Statements filed or refiled during the year 1972 will expire on December 31, 1977. If you filed your statement during 1972, California law requires you to prepare a new statement and file it with the County Clerk before December 31, 1977. The Art Auction for Beacon House brought out most of the "cream of the local crop" Saturday night. Rod Dewar and Francie Campbell compared chill factors from the Washington's Birthday swim, Frank Cortright shared some of his photographic secrets, and the William Bullases were there to see his painting sold. By the way, the Lloyd Morains provided the locale for Interim's Wild Boar roast last summer, which was also a great success. Interim is very new in the area just about 1 year old. It is a halfway house for emotionally disturbed young people. These young people have been institutionalized and now are ready to enter the world again. Interim provides a home for their transition period and then helps them to set up their own living arrangements, helps get jobs and generally provides guidance while they are taking their giant step back into society.

Jane and Robert McFarren moved to the Peninsula eight years ago. Since then they have become vital, active members of the community with Mr. McFarren's paintings adorning the walls of many a home and Mrs. McFarren's enthusiastic support of the Monterey County Symphony among other organizations.

Upon arrival here, Mrs. McFarren became active with the Community Hospital Pink Ladies and then was President of Monterey Peninsula Volunteer Services for two years and was also in charge of one of their fall sales.

Having always been interested in music, with a talented father and husband, her dedication to the Symphony is no surprise. She started her service to the Symphony as chairman of the boutique committee. At each Preview Tea hand crafted items as well as donations are presented and provide a continuing income for the Guild.

Mrs. McFarren then served as Symphonie d'Elegance

Chairman, vice-president and now president of the Guild. In the latter capacity she also sits on the Association Board and the Development Committee of the Symphony. "We are striving to find new ways to increase our income," Mrs. McFarren says, "because all of our costs have gone up appreciably. Our Guild is second in the nation for the support it has given to an orchestra of a metropolitan status. We gave over $46,000 last year."

The Guild membership now numbers 860. These members sponsor several fund raising events each year. In the Fall it is the Senior Tennis Tournament, followed by the Golden Domino Tournament. Every other year a Creative Needle exhibition is presented in conjunction with the Museum. At the end of the year, the Guild sponsors a "pops" concert which is part of the Symphony's education program.

Musical education is dear to the heart of Mrs. McFarren. The Symphony Association, in connection with the school districts, sponsors a series of "in school" demonstrations of music. "I went for the first time recently," Jane says, "and I really learned something. This time it was on strings. All the little 4th graders were sitting on the floor and were asked questions. There were two string instruments missing and while I was figuring out which ones they were, the children had provided the answers."

While chatting about the arts, we watched the McFarren's own little zoo parade across their deck. The squirrels were quite audacious. "Bob feeds them and it's getting to be a bit much. A little while ago he bought a 200 pound sack of warnuts and that's already gone. Now we are serving salted almonds after carefully washing off the salt." Hane adds.

One of Robert McFarren's "California Landscapes" will be among the items at the Benefit Drawing at the Symphony's Fashion Show on March 15. One of his paintings also graced the Beacon House Auction. In other words the Mc-Farrens are deeply into the arts and equally deeply into community affairs, and what better comment can be made about anyone.

Children's Experimental Theater

Learning while performing

BY BARBARA CAMERA

The Children's Experimental Theater has been calling the Forest Theater facility home for many years. The young actors and actresses use the area underneath the main stage, aptly dubbed the Theater-inthe-Ground, for their dramatic activities.

Under the direction of Marcia Hovick, the Children's Theater operates on some very sound, childoriented premises.

"It's not a theater that's a showplace for the very talented children while the not-so-talented youngsters take tickets," Ms. Hovick explains. "All of the youngsters get a chance to act. Everyone experiments with performing.

"The plays are by children" for children instead of the usual children's theater which consists of plays for children by adults."

The Children's Experimental Theater originated back in 1960 as a part of the Community Theater which performed at the old Golden Bough Theater. In those early years, the youngsters worked around the adult

"We never knew what the backdrop would be and we had to use the lights pretty much as they were set up for the adults," says Ms. Hovick.

But that really wasn't such a problem since, in this theater group, it's the actors and actresses - the children - who are the center of attention. The productions are designed to show them off.

The children's operation moved to its present location at the Forest Theater about nine years ago. According to the director - and the youngsters' present for an after-school rehearsal seemed to agree - the Theater-in-the-Ground is an ideal location for a children's theater group.

It's a natural place, like the youngsters; and it's not so elegant that the children (or adults, for that matter) are inhibited or constantly worrying about being a little messy or clumsy.

The Children's Experimental Theater functions on two fronts - drama classes and performing both of which are very much integrated. All day Saturday, hour long drama classes are taught to different age groups. This theater school accomodates approximately 100 students. Interest is greater, but because of space limitations; the class sizes are kept at about 20 youngsters, so some children usually have to be turned away. Tuition for the nine-month (Sept.-June) school presently is $160. Some scholarships are available. Registration is conducted on a first-comefirst-served basis:

In these classes, the basics of dramatics - pantomime, speech, improvisation, and movement - are taught. It's only after the youngsters have a thorough indoctrination in these skills that they begin performing.

In the spring, each class in the school (sometimes some age groups are combined) presents a free play as a gift to the city of Carmel.

During the year, the young players also tour Peninsula schools with their productions. These travelling shows were instituted 11 years ago and have met with wide success. Multiple casting is used to give each child a chance to perform and to insure that no one child misses too much school while touring. Rehearsal time for these productions is in addition to the Saturday drama classes. Depending on the experience and ages of the cast, four to 12 or more rehearsals are required to ready a play to tour.

All shows are designed to be easily moved for performances in a school's cafeteria or multi-purpose room. Such familiar parts of the theater as a curtain, lights, and even a stage are forgone to make the productions more flexible. Sets and props are small, lightweight, and moveable.

Costumes are used for every production, though realistic or imaginative or a combination of both, depending on the type of play. Loel Shuler is the creative hand behind the theater's outstanding costumes.

The Children's Ex-

specializes in period plays, which serve the added purpose of teaching history. The younger children perform in fairy tales and folk stories while the high school students do some theater classics such as Shakespeare and Moliere.

When the theater group first formed, the 25 youngsters enrolled were all girls. Now the ratio of boys to girls is a much more even 50-50. Students are from all over the Peninsula, approximately 40 per cent of those from Carmel.

Several years ago another

Staff Players, the adult arm props). of the young people's group, formed and began presenting pruductions at the Theater - in - the - Ground. Proceeds from these perprovide formances scholarships for youngsters to attend the theater school. Ms. Hovick sees some deficiencies in the 65-seat Theater-in-the-Ground but, most pertain more to the comfort and convenience of the audiences (rickety seats and lack of parking space) and the efficiency of the behind-the-scenes operation perimental Theater aspect was added to the (shortage of storage areas Children's Theater. The for costumes, sets, and

"Of course, a coat of paint and new carpet would also be nice," she adds.

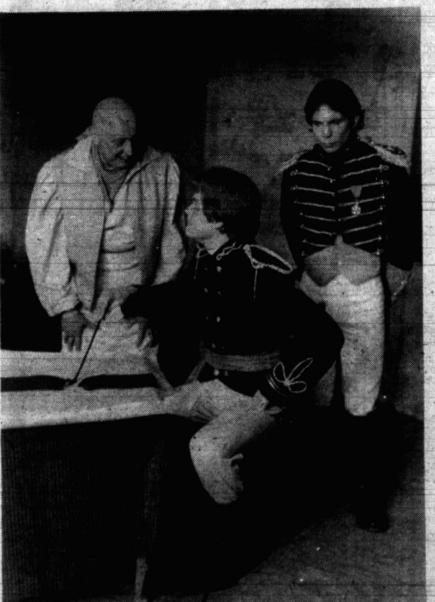

One improvement Ms. Hovick would like to see in the stage area is in the lighting.

But, if the audiences notice the condition of the seats and the lighting, the youngsters don't seem to notice at all since none of the theater's shortcomings affects the high quality of the experience they receive or of the performances they present.

MARCIA HOVICK, director of the Children's Experimental Theater, helps apply make-up to one of her students in the cramped quarters of the Theater in the Ground.

THIS WEEKEND the Staff Players will present "Two by Shaw." in the Forest Theater in the Ground to benefit the Children's Experimental Theater.

groups, - par-Ethnic those - from ticularly Southeastern Europe or Asia, are often fascinating for an audience, inasmuch as the coloring, the costuming, and the esoteric type of dancing is most compelling and ingratiating. So it turned out to be with the National Folk Ballet of Yugoslavia, which performed Thursday evening, Feb. 24 at Sunset Center, Carmel, under the auspices of the Carmel Music Society. Since this country is a composite of six independent republics, welded into a honogenous political system (Serbis, Slovenia, Croatia, Bosnia-Hercegovina, Macedonia and Montenegro); the unmistakable ethnic character of each section was represented in these dances. However, the most pervasive dance throughout the country is the Kolo, with obvious influences from Greece, Turkey and Italy in the central and souther

part, and from Austria and Hungary in the northern

Let it be said at the very outset, that this performance was a most vigorous, vivacious, colorful and dazzling spectacle, on all accounts - dance, music, and song. The costuming of the men and the women from the different regions in all of these dances was fabulously beautiful, diverse, and highly decorative. Branko Markovich, the artistic director of this group, was also the choreographer of all of the dances, with the exception of one, the War Dance of the Komitas, which was choreographed by Mira Sanjina.

Of especial importance and symbolic significance was the Tupan (the drummer) in the Dances of Albanian origin, the dances from Macedonia, and the Final Suite from Vranje in Southern Serbia. His name was Slavko Antonvich, 'The accompanying orchestra consisted of a group of four violins, one bass viol, two accordions, two guitars (one large and one small), and two clarinets of different tonal range, approaching a very high pitch. At other times, tambourines were also used.

This ensemble performed all of these dances in the typical closed circle, opening up at times into a chain. Some of thee Kolos were for men only, some for women only, and some for both. The circle usually progressed both clockwise and counterclockwise; it moved into the center, and may times it broke the circle for tunes or individual action. There were shaking Kolos in which small jumps literally shook the dancers; stepping kolos, which progressed close to the ground, and hopping Kolos made up of repeated step-close and step-hop patterns.

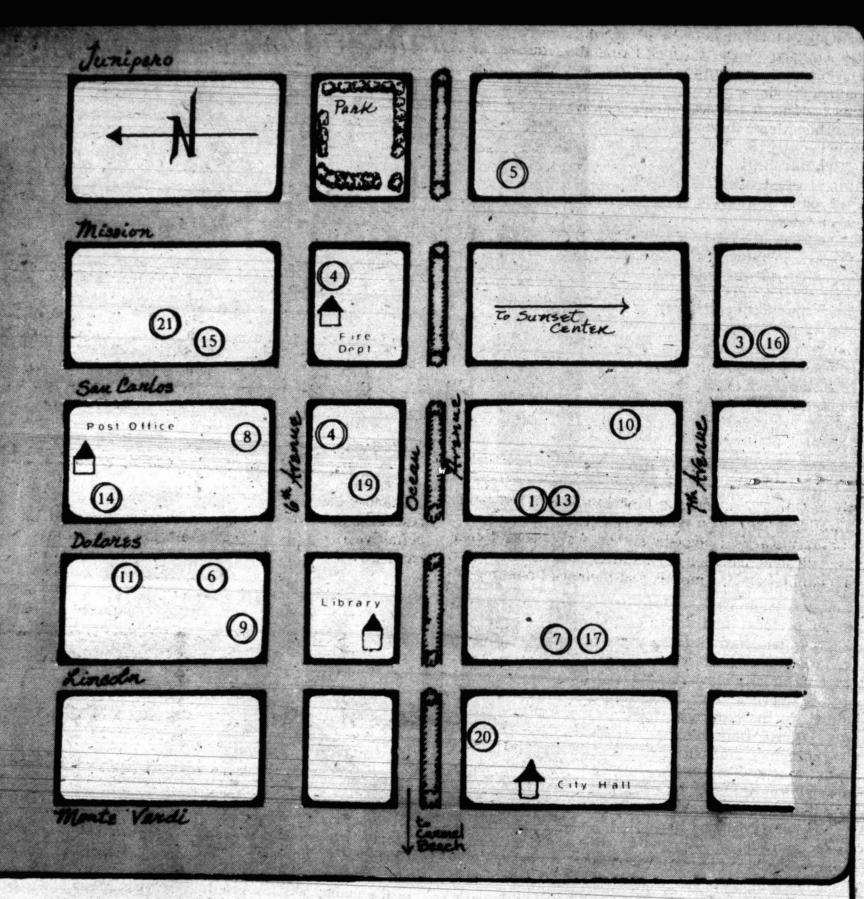

The 'dancers moved in accord with the rhythm set by the orchestral accompaniment, with the leader marking the tempo and the rhythm. No matter how complex the superimposed rhythm of the accompaniment was, the dancers maintained a steady underlying beat. In some of these dances, the dancers linked in circles, held fingers, hands, elbows, shoulders, waists or belts. Each dance had an electrifying tension which was resolved into an undulating wave-like motion, both in the bodies and in the encircling arms. In addition, there was a curious, relaxed knee action with a strong drive through the heel and into the ground, rising again to drive down once more. At times, the dancers rose and fell on the supporting toes, then dropped lower before continuing.

In some of these Kolos, the dancers stepped to the side and closed sharply, repeated this procedure, and then added some extraneous movement as a leg swing, body dip, shoulder shake, or head, roll. In one of these dances, the performers carried swords, sweeping them in a great circle as the leaper and (wisted about in the center of the group (War Dance of the Komitas).

When the women dances, they were mostly modest and reserved, with their eyes lowered; however, from some regions, which were non-Moslem, their eyes were clear ahead. In spite of the hypnotic appearance of the group in action, there was never any loss of conscious awareness.

The folk orchestra under its conductor. Grujica Milojevich, played a potpourri of folk songs with great impetus and gusto and a vocal group sang selected folk songs as well as gypsy melodies with characteristic regional character.

Although all of these dances from the various sections of Yugoslavia were perfect gems in every respect, there were some that had an outstandin, character, even above the perfection of the total. Such could be mentioned as: The opening number, the Brankovo Kolo; the final Suite from Vranje in Southeastern Serbia, both mvolving the entire company; the Dances from Macedonia, Serbia, the Dalmatian dances, the dances from the Banat in the plain of Vojvodina; and the Suite of Albanian Dances from the section of Rugovo.

This was indeed one of those evenings of perfect entertainment, in which song, music, and dance blended harmoniously into a perfect and exciting spectacle, as was attested by the many plaudits, and the final standing ovation of the audience.

The Friends of Photography will present an exhibition of photographs, drawings and generative works (xerox telecopier, 3-M VQC I & II machines, thermofax, and heat transferable paper), by Peter Hunt Thompson from Feb. 26 to April 3.

This exhibition represents his first collaborative interest in a public showing of his work. As a writer he has either contributed critical essays to or has edited the majority of the Friends' journal UNTITLED.

VIVALDI: IL PASTOR FIDO (Six Sonatas for Flute and Continuo), Op. 13 — Jean-Pierre Rampal, flute, with Robert Vevron-Lacroix, harpsichord) — RCA-FRL1-5467)

The six sonatas for flute and continuo present a great variety in structure. The number of movements runs from four (Nos. 2, 4, 6), to five (Nos. 1 & 3), and even to six (No. 5). None of them adhere exclusively to one or the other types (sonada de chiesa or sonata da camera); all, to a certain degree, are concomitants of both types. All of them juxtapose dance movements with others bearing only a tempo indication.

In this recording, Jean-Pierre Rampal, flautist, and Robert Veyron-Lacroix, harpsichordist, being not only virtuoso in their own right, but also having played together for an interminably long period, bring out all the charms and richness of this music, in this magnificent edition made by the interpreters themselves. There is a nobility and a mobility in their concerted performance which, though in free form, is yet stamped with all the bravura and interpretive perception that one could possibly desire. They bring out the various moods, of these works - solemn, mournful, gay, sprightly - but at all times, their projection is in majestic proportions and grandeur of conception. The spirit and the divergences of the two sonata forms are so well defined that one obtains a musical panorama of the Vivaldi genius in all of its phraseology and in its accentual musical evaluation.

The tone quality of both instruments is superbly clear and resonant, and this disc may be recommended as the definitive rendition of these charming compositions. RCA has drawn this recording from its Classic French Erato.

soloist, Women of the Chicago Symphony Chorus, Glen Ellyn Children's Chorus, Chicago Symphony Orchestra conducted by James Levine - RCA-ARL2-1757 - 2 discs).

This monumental Symphony of Mahler requires, in addition to a full orchestra, a mezzo-soprano (in this recording, Marilyn Horne), a children's chorus, and a women's chorus. This composition is in six movements, and is subtitled "Midsummer Dream." It carries out the duality of Mahler's personality - that of the tragic adult and the innocent child. It may also be construed as a search by the composer for that state of pure, childlike peace and innocence for which his soul vearned so strongly and so consistently.

In its totality, this performance is unique, in the fact that not once did Maestro Levine falter or let down his musical guard, and never did he forfeit or lose any of the tensions that are almost an indispensible concomitant of this massive symphony. He conducted it, in its huge, colorful canvas, with a impinging intensity, with driving incisiveness, and with emphatic power, in which the first desk men contributed an invaluable and outstanding feat in their solo obbligatos b throughout the work.

The tonal quality of the various vocal and instrumental forces is brightly-eolored, with clarity, precisjon and purity of musical texture and of sonic distinction. This set is very highly recommended as another example of Maestro Levine's orientation to the spirit of the composer in a reading of supremacy.

The Agnus Dei, which closes the Mass, chromatic in nature and without any restraint, displayed the humanity and the mysticism of the work by the magnificent tonality of the combined vocal and instrumental forces.

The tone quality, vocal and instrumental, has a rich, resonant, and sonorous sound, with a distinct presence. This disc is highly recommended, not only because it is a first recording of this admirable work, but also because it is a very fine exposition of it by these French musicians. This is a co-production of RCA France and the O.R.T.F.

MOZART: PIANO CONCERTOS No. 16 IN D. K. 451; NO. 17 IN G. K. 453 (Peter Serkin, pianist, with the English Chamber Orchestra conducted by Alexander Schneider -RCA-ARL1-1943).

Mozart dated this concerto in D in his thematic notebook as of March 22, 1784, and it is one more proof, if proof were needed, that under pressure his workmanship was at its best. The result does not suggest a pondered concerto, but a spontaneous one. It has orchestral brilliance, with trumpets and drums, and full pinaistic display in the first and last movements.

The G major concerto is an intensely individual, an emotionally searching work, and exacts an unusual musical intelligence in its performance. Although the G major concerto opens softly and never attempts to stun with virtuosity. it ranges far through a great variety of moods and treatment. The exposition is a profusion of themes, gay, singing, at momoents even darkly dramatic, which becomes symphonic with the separate use of the winds, and grows on the hearer as the piano develops them in close conjunction with the orchestra.

Peter Serkin has steadily gained in pianistic momentum, until, at this point, he has become a prodigious talent, as well as a musician of rare sensitivity and perception. He plays these two concerti with unexcelled technical dexterity and with an elegant plasticity and an eloquent limpidity. His dynamics, phrasing, shading, intonation, and tonal coloration are superbly revealed, with expert and tasteful control. He exhibits the various nuances with rhythmic and harmonic diversity, and with the graceful, lyric manifestations inherent in these two scores of Mozart. His elaboration, development, and ornamentation are subtly chromatic in nature, with a sense of exquisite musical values, as well as scale passages of excellent figurations. His touch is distributed in such a manner that it enhances the musical stance wherever so denoted, and gives it a purity of statement, all of which results in a performance of unqualified nobility, majesty and refinement.

The English Chamber Orchestra under Alexander Schneider, gives him support of the most edifying kind spacious, brilliant, and persuasively expansive - and the soloist and the orchestral tutti are in perfect balance and rapport. The sound quality of both the piano and the orchestral strings and the other choirs of the orchestra, are clear, with lovely tonal resonance, suavity, and melody. This disc is recommended as very fine renditions of these Mozart concerti by this young pianist in a pristine and fresh ap-

JOHN DOWLAND: LUTE MUSIC (Julian Bream, lutenist -RCA-ARL1-1491).

John Dowland was a great virtuoso on the lute, without any rival in Europe. But Dowland was also a great composer. It was these qualities which set him on such a high pinnacle of fame in his own day, not only in England, but all over Europe.

The lute, designed for the first single-line melodies and drones of its Arabic origins, began to acquire a true repertoire only when a notation was devised capable of indicating not only harmony, but even the polyphony so alien to its nature. Tablature is, apart from the characteristically complex German type, an eminently practical system that combines information as to pitch and direction of a precise nature for the placing of every note on the proper string. Although valuable music for the lute was also written by other English composers, Dowland's genius raised him not only far above his fellow-countrymen, but also above all others who wrote for this instrument.

Beautiful and Lofty Things

Enchanted by the dream

BY JEFF HUDELSON

"It was the dream itself enchanted me" is a line spoken by the poet, W.B. Yeats: in Dan Gotch's original play, "Beautiful Lofty Things". The line is at once, a capsule review and an excellent character note for the show's performers. But "dreams" do differ.

And differing indeed were the dreams of the play's two characters. Years dreamed. of Art, purely and honestly expressed; Maude Gonne, the actress, dreamed of a free Ireland. Both dreams were "Beautiful Lofty Things" and, at times, conflicts arose.

The play is set in the study of Yeats' Irish home in 1929. The event is the final meeting between the poet and the actress. Throughout the unfolding action of the play, we discover a great deal about the enchantingdisenchanting loveinspiration relationship of these two great figures of the Irish Renaissance.

At intervals throughout the production we are treated to excerpts of Yeats' poetry and the journals of Maude Gonne. Yet, while this may sound "dull", it is not. Gotch has put together a beautiful package that become a

Gotch, as a playwright, has done an excellent job. and as the show's director, cast and "blocked" the show

The role of Yeats is very well portrayed by Bob Lester, whose characterization in this show is quite different from his recent roles. It is the best performance I have seen him give as an actor. My only objection is a continuing one - at times (particularly early) he is too loud.

Lester has a very strong voice, and accasionally (especially when expressing anger) he uses too much volume. He doesn't need it. He has tremendousd vocal "definition", which is well displayed in this poetic work.

The role of Maude Gonne is played by Ann Thurber. Her characterization is strong and consistent, It is very he has assembled a strong to be see the beautiful actress with whom Yeats fell in love. It is less easy to see the zealous Irish patriot in her performance.

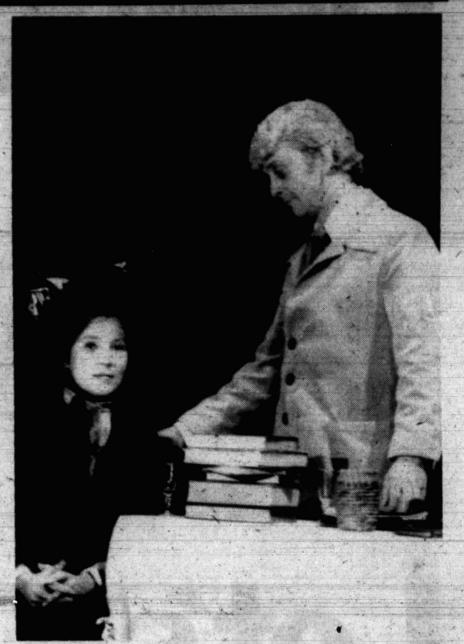

Ms. Thurber's

formance struck me as being perhaps a touch too controlled, too calculating. Perhaps Gotch, as director, was blind to the intention of Gotch, the playwright, in this one instance.

Still, these "criticisms" are but quibbles - for the show itself flows beautifully and seems to hover very near great truths.

Joan Cobb Hopkins provides the show's musical accompaniment, and Jeanne Graham the visual accompaniment with her excellent costumes.

While I saw "Beautiful Lofty Things" at the Wharf Theatre, their final performance will be presented this Friday night (Merch. 1) in Carmel. The curtain time is 8 p.m. at the Carl Cherry Foundation, Guadalupe and Fourth. Be enchanted by the dream.

Network, a television satire

by julia montague

Paddy Chayevsky must have had a good time writing "Network." I'm sure all avid television viewers must feel that most networks are patterned after UBS, but I certainly hope not.

This marvelous movie is a brittle commentary on the power that destorys men's souls... money. Brilliantly directed by Sidney Lumet, each of the stars portrays his part so perfectly that it is hard to choose a luminary amongst William Holden, as the News Chief whose authority is usurped, is getting handsomer with age, and is entirely believable as the lover of the frenetic Faye Dunaway. Robert Duvall is the icy-cold epitomy of a corporate clay foot, and Peter Finch is superb, in his late role, as the slowly debilitating newscaster. If he does not receive a posthumous Oscar for this role, then there is really something wrong with the system. He gave it everything he had, and left the viewer breathless with his acting vitality.

UBS Broadcasting is losing it's percentage of the viewing market, and drastic steps need to be taken to raise the ratings. Peter Finch, who has been fired, offers to blow his brains out on camera, and low and behold, the ratings go up.

Then a black commie is offered a prime time spot to show how the liberation armies are operating in their kidnappings, bank robberies and all the other goodies they are capable of: Once again the ratings go up. These are the brainchildren of Ms. Dunaway, who revels in the excitement she has generated in the depraved minds of Americans. The ratings start to slip again, and she comes up with another idea... turn Finch into a crusader for good, and you think... where will it

I, found myself laughing uproariously, but in many instances, I was laughing alone. Sometimes the audience did not find the horror amusing. Well, it ends with the deaths of executives, the undoing of the liberation army, and the comeuppance of Ms. Dunaway and her "classic" interpretation of what "turns on" (the tube in) American homes.

Take this one in your stride, it is satire, after all. Not since "The Groove Tube" has anyone taken such a nasty poke at television, and I loved it.

ROCCO TAVANI (playing a looney physicist who believes he's Albert Einstein) gets reassurance from the nurse Sally Bruns that the murder he's just committed doesn't matter too much. "The Physicists" is playing at Hartnell College this weekend in the college's Studio Theatre.

Water rationing for all customers of California-American Water Company is now in effect. Immediate compliance is required in order to avoid stricter rationing.

- All residential customers are limited to 50 gallons of water per person each day averaged over a two-month billing period. For example, two people in a house are allotted 6,000 gallons for a two month period.
- Non-residential customers are required to reduce their monthly consumption by varying percentages from 15 percent for restaurants to 50 per cent for golf courses.
- Violation of the regulations will result in restriction of service at the meter to what will flow through a one-eighth inch orifice. The restriction will stay in place at least 72 hours for the first violation and 720 hours for subsequent violations.
- In the event of extreme hardships, an appeals procedure will be available through the Water Management Agency.
- If you have questions about these regulations, call the Company's rationing "Hot Line" at 375-5117 on weekdays from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Flanders Doolittle Park

'Keep it wild and beautiful'...

By DAVID COLE

"A natural green wedge penetrating into the urban area.

That's the way Carmel's first residential park is described. The Flanders-Doolittle property, now being developed into a primitive preserve of sorts, is a narrow, wooded valley that stretches from the low lying field across from the Mission, north to Mountain View Ave.

Unlike public recreation sites like Carmel Beach and Carmel River State Beach. Flanders-Doolittle is aimed at being a park for those who live in Carmel, not those who are just passing through to see the sights.

This summer, city forestry personnel cleared a fire road the length of the 32-acre park. This now serves as an easy walking trail, winding through the willows in the lowlands and through the pines and redwoods in the upper end. There is a 180 foot elevation difference between the two ends of the park.

Benches and waste barrels have been placed at various points along the trail.

Currently being considered for the new park are better access points, one from the city end of Mountain View Ave. and one from the east end of 11th Street. Access from the county side has also been discussed

But the scenic lands

section of the city's plan describes the Flanders property as, "a forested canyon area which will be left in its natural state."

Some proposals are in the air concerning development of the lower, Flanders property - possibly for tennis courts or picnic tables - but the main thrust of sentiment at present is to leave all of the park as primitive as possible.

There continues to be consideration of the proposal to sell off certain sites which stand above the lower end of the park, just south of the Flanders mansion. The Flanders house itself, now being rented, has also been considered for a wide range of things including sale, use as a library annex, use as the forestry department headquarters, and use as a museum.

The Doolittle property was purchased by the city in 1971 for $120,000 and the Flanders Estate in 1972 for $275,000. A consultant was engaged to draw up a park plan in 1973, but strong objections to the plan arose and progress was halted. At one time, a public works yard was planned for the center of the park, taking up around a third of its area.

Loneliness — We all feel it

By BARBARA CAMERA

Poets and songwriters have achieved fame and fortune writing about loneliness. But for people experiencing it — and especially for the elderly those feelings of loneliness, glorified in verse and melody, are frightening.

"Loneliness is a part of the human condition," says Joan Spear, clinical social worker with the Family Services Agency. "We all experience it at one time or another. But that doesn't make it easier to handle."

Because loneliness often accompanies age, Family Services is making a special effort to help the elderly cope with these feelings. Experience has shown, though, that the elderly don't often come to the Family Services office for help in dealing with their loneliness, so Family Services tries to go to them. It's part of their Outreach Program and that's exactly what it does. The counselor goes out into the community.

In the case of loneliness and the elderly, it's Joan Spear conducting a six-week workshop at the Carmel Foundation. Of course, even this arrangement leaves the ultimate step of actually attending the workshop with the individual.

"If people can get up the courage to come to the meeting (or the office), they're usually ready to very talk," says Spear. "They want to share their ideas and feelings."

.What are their feelings? Often, according to Spear, they are blaming someone or some situation for their loneliness. They may blame the spouse who died for making them lonely. Or, they may feel they wouldn't be lonely if they were married or hadn't been forced to retire.

"I try to make them take responsibility for their own. feelings of loneliness," says Spear. "Once a person takes responsibility, then he' can begin to do something about

People do resist accepting this responsibility, though, she points out. Since the elderly have often encountered overwhelming losses - family and friends,

...with safe, not easy access

THIS NARROW foot bridge leads into the Flanders Doolittle Park walking trail at the east end.

At the east end of Mountain View Ave. lies a bridge of rough planks, strung between water and sewer pipes that cross the Flanders-Doolittle park canyon. The bridge, rough and dangerous as it is, connects' the city with the main Flanders-Doolittle park trail on the other side.

This crossing has been enmeshed in controversy for years now. A proposal several years ago to put in an earth fill with vehicle access drew a storm of protest from neighbors who feared the eventual connection of Mountain View Ave. with Highway 1, thus providing direct access to Carmel via this street.

The latest protest against a new earthfill proposal is being led by councilwoman Helen Arnold who warns against giving vehicle access to Flanders-Doolittle park. Arnold argued against an earthfill of any size, even one vehicles, reasoning that if city vehicles could use it, private vehicles would find a way too.

The council threw out the earthfill proposal recommended by the planning commission and moved their attention to a 10-foot wide wood bridge. Arnold again argued that such a large. developed access to the park would encourage motorcycles and other vehicles to enter an area reserved only for foot traffic and the quiet contemplation of nature

Arnold has so far whittled the bridge down from 10 to six feet in width, but she would like to cut it down to three. She would furthermore like to put up turnstiles or some other form of impediment to motorcycle use.

The park must be given safe accessibility, she says (a local doctor was partially paralyzed after a fall from the existing bridge), but Arnold agesn't feel it necessary to erect something that can hold aimed toward emergency vehicles. She wants to provide access, but not to make it too easy.

Cherry Foundation open house

The Carl Cherry Foundation, Carmel's recently reestablished cultural organization, will host an open house this Saturday from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m. in an effort to acquaint - or reacquaint - area residents with its programs and

The foundation, located at the corner of Guadalupe and 4th streets, was left by artist Jeanne d'Orge (Mrs. Carl Cherry) for the exhibition of her works and to help foster the arts and sciences in Carmel.

Active until her death in 1964, the foundation sponsored musical and dramatic events, brought distinguished speakers here and aided artists. But after Mrs. Cherry's death, the foundation seemed to die also.

Due largely to the urgings of a local group calling itself "Friends of the Cherry Foundation," the foundation opened its doors just over a year ago, and last fall solidified its dedication to becoming a creative force in the cultural and spiritual life of the community. Jane Wilgress was retained as curator and more and more speakers and programs came to the founcation.

Under the terms of Mrs. Cherry's will, the foundation should sponsor: a) experimental fine arts, sciences and education b) art galleries and free schools c) shops and laboratories d) further social relationships between art and science grounds, and finally, to assist artists, playwrights and scientists and other non-profit organizations.

A look at the programs sponsored by the Cherry Foundation since it reopened its doors, show that it is meeting these challenges. Classes in yoga, as well as musical concerts, a course on the Great Books taught by Milton Mayer, lectures on the philosophies of Jung and Teilhard de Chardin are some of the Cherry Foundation offerings. Curator Jane Wilgress maintains an open-door policy for persons and non-profit organizations wishing to bring their art and philosophy to the Carmel community.

activity for the sake of activity just to fill in time as a solution to loneliness.

"This may do away with boredom," she says, "but a person can still feel just as lonely."

Rather, she suggests that a person seek out his own individual interests and pursue these.

More important than lots of activities, Spear feels, is the willingness of a lonely person to enter into close relationships. Referring to one of her reference books, "Loneliness: The Fear of Love," she says that closeness and caring are two things people want most; but also fear most.

"Maybe it's because they don't want to be 'deserted' again as in the past when loved ones have died," she explains. "Perhaps they fear becoming a burden to someone they care about. Or they may be afraid of being rejected."

Whatever an individual's reason, it results in a reluctance to take a risk that could ease loneliness.

Spear doesn't view loneliness as an entirely negative condition.

"A person can learn a lot about himself by allowing himself to feel loneliness," she explains. "But this is very scary for the elderly because they often have so many other problems."

Last year, landscape architect Harry Tsugawa was retained by the city to draw up a plan for the present fire road and the city is continuing to use Tsugawa other park improvements.

But development of Flanders-Doolittle is likely to be a slow, careful process.

Councilwoman Helen Arnold expressed her sentiments on the matter in a recent council meeting, saying: "I believe it imperative for us to keep our impact on the Flanders-Doolittle property to the barest minimum, to make it usable, yes, but is it too much to hope that, even with the village developing all around it, we might walk through that small valley, and see it as Junipero Serra did - in all its wildness and beauty?"

Friend Nello Drizari's food

for mind and body

In this issue we will delve into the prolific author Nelo Drizari's special love for Carmel. He has completed "Picturesque Garden of Enchantment", his fifth book. This latest masterpiece is a long needed historical record of the Monterey Peninsula with emphasis on Carmel. It has been written with meticulous care and research. Nelo and I have been long time neighbors and discussed of an evening his travels to Rome, where he attended astute classes, later used as background material for his brilliant novel "Scanderbeg".

"Garden of Enchantment" is a truly elegant chronicle of the cultural life around us. There are 18 comprehensive chapters. One chapter, specifically is "The Enchanting Village", which sensitively deals with the history of Father Junipero Serra, who first put foot on Carmel soil in 1770.

There is a detailed account of our military installations, especially the Presidio di Memory, were Mr. Drizari was chairman of the Albanian Dept. Born and raised in that mountain country, lamb is their everyday meat — all the year around. Nelo told me of his youth when a whole spring lamb would be put into trenches which were first covered with aromatic leaves, such as fresh sweet basil and mint. Then came seasoned logs, enough to burn most of the night. The secret is not to remove the crackling skin until serving. Because underneath is the juiciest of meat imaginable.

Realist Nelo knew this couldn't possibly take place here, so every Fourth of July he served forth legs of lamb spit roasted at former Carmel smoke house (no longer existing, alas). So, instead, this ingenious bachelor had them home oven roasted, rubbed with salt, pepper and honey. Cook the lamb gently until almost done. In the Balkans it is always rare...the crust is like an hors d'oeuvre, eaten with one's fingers. The use of knives and forks is taboo in this open air community.

You might want to have the lamb boned and tied by your meat man. In this case ask him to save the bones so you can put them on top of the roast, which, modern style, is wrapped in double duty foil. Do not add water or cover meat completely so that it may brown deliciously with rosemary, thyme, and marjoram added.

With this, in Albania, a sharp knife is the only instrument used. Saves on dishwashing. There is such a pronounced difference between mutton and lamb in those highlands as even with us. We use garlic slivers inserted under the fell (skin) to counteract the strong flavor that can't otherwise be disguised in mutton.

Nelo says he uses "What's Cooking Around the World" as his guide. It is filled with authentic native recipes from the wives and instructors at D.L.I.

How about Tavi Elbasani: Cut 4 lbs lamb into chunks, roasting in earthenware vessel. Thirty minutes before it is done, beat 6 eggs thoroughly. Add some yogurt to eggs, slowly pour this mixture over the lamb. Roast slowly for better flavor.

An ideal dessert is backlava; but it is such an intricate dessert, that unless you can buy it already made, make a sweetened rice pudding.

Let us end with a bonus or two: Domatesli Pilav: Wash 2 cups long grain rice three times. Pour 3½ cups boiling chicken broth over and cool. Peel 3 medium tomatoes, removing the seeds. Cut into small pieces. Heat 4 Tbsps. butter, add tomatoes until a smooth paste forms. Add the chicken broth, bringing back to a boil. Drain rice and add to mixture. Cover cooking without stirring over medium flame until liquid is absorbed. Serve steaming hot. Herbs of your choice are easily included, and sweeten slightly.

Kadaif Dessert: Separate some shredded wheat squares into halves. Arrange them on bottom of ungreased baking pan. Sprinkle with ground walnuts and 1 cup sugar. Pour melted butter over this. Cover with some more shredded wheat halves baking 20 minutes at 325F. Cool. Prepare a syrup from sugar, water and powdered cinnamon. Pour hot over cooled shreddies. Let soak until completely absorbed. Serve with whipped cream or Dream. Whip on the side. Economical and satisfying.

Monterey County Symphony

Nicanor Zabaleta superb

IRVING W. GREENBERG

In programming the works to be performed by the Monterey County Symphony Orchestra last weekend, Maestro Haymo Taeuber chose a melange of such diverse composers as Boirldieu, Ravel, Stravinsky, Britten and Enesco. As soloist in the Boieldieu Concerto for Harp and Orchestra and in the Ravel Introduction and Allegro, he had as soloist Nicanor Zabaleta, probably the outstanding harpist of the day.

In performing the Harp Concerto in C major by Francois-Adrien Boieldieu, Nicanor Zabaleta displayed all of his lyricism and elegance of the stylistic. tonality of that period of French culture. He exhibited in his performance an irresistible and vivacious technical prowess, as well as a solid, well-grounded musicianship. This was amply demonstrated by his shimmering glissandi, his finesse in exposition, and the elegance of his conception of the thematic material extant in this work. Classical in his approach, he played arpeggiated trills, scale passages, with incredible skill and ingratiating nuances. Particularly gratifying were his embellishments in the slow movement, where ornateness made for simplicity and not for artful evocation. The delightful light and gay Rondeau that concludes this work was displayed with brilliancy and with the many facets that are indigenous to harp bravura. The Orchestra accompanied Mr. Zabaleta with elan and emphaticassertion in a balanced homogeneity.

The Ravel Introduction and Allegro for solo harp, strings, flute and clarinet, gave Mr. Zabaleta the opportunity to show his deep understanding and ap-preciation of the highly impressionistic coloration of the composition. In the opening Introduction, the duet for flute and clarinet, with the extended melody for the cello against the background of violin, flute, and clarinet, was performed in a highly variegated manner and totally expert in its definition. The long and appealing harp solo that sparked the Allegro exposed Mr. Zabaleta's zest and his resolution was in the magnificent tradition of the textural fullness. The harp cadenza, that occurs towards the end, recalling some of the principal melodic ideas, was conceived by the soloist with a dramatic statement that involved all of the conceptual and atmospheric passages in the composition, resulting in a reading of grace, charm and inspired musicianship. The strings and the flute and clarinet accompaniment were intertwined most competently and elegantly with the soloist's utterance, giving an added dimension to the soloist's playing. In these two performances, Mr. Zabaleta affirmed the high musical standards that have given him world renown. As an encore, Mr. Zabaleta graciously played a composition for harp solo, namely: the exquisitely performed "Song in the Night" by Carlos Salzedo.

The second Suite from Igor "The Stravinsky's Firebird," which was premiered in a ballet in Paris in 1916 by the Ballet Russe of St. Petersburg (Leningrad now), was given a forceful and highly overt dramatic presentation by the Orchestra under the precise and distinct direction of Maestro Taeuber. The eerie atmosphere of the introduction was evoked by the strings playing most beautifully in a low register, with the somber subject in the woodwinds coming through with the mysterious effulgence in the harmonics of the violins and the cellos. The sinuous movement of the dance of the Firebird was most rapturously displayed in the simulation of the strings and the woodwinds. The graceful melody of the Dance of the Princesses was magnificently evoked by the graceful tone of the oboe, will excellent harp accompaniment. The demonic and infernal dance of Kastchei, first heard fortissimo in the unison strings, progressed and accelerated with great power towards a frenzied climax, which was relieved by a tender and gentle lullaby, exquisitely played by the bassoon, accompanied by muted strings unusually fine musicianship. The excellent horn solo over string tremolos, gaining in intensity and excitement until a feverish section for the lush strings brings the Suite to a dramatic conclusion. Maestro Taeuber gave as trenchant and as dramatic a reading of this work as could be desired, with effective transmission to the listening audience.

The Benjamin Britten

"Soirees Musicales," is in part based on Rossini's work of the same name; as a matter of fact, Britten used three of them in his own set.

The first number, actually from the third act of Rossini's "William Tell," was played most beautifully by the woodwind section with light iridescence characteristic of either Rossini or Britten in these compositions. The Canzonetta is "La Promessa," the first of Rossini's "Soirees," played with a graceful and attenuated charm by all sections of the orchestra, resulted in a studied and limpid evocation. The "Tirolese," a bracing Alpine air, was launched by the solo trumpet, soon taken up by the other instruments, and it was exposed in a manner simulating a yodeling effect. The Bolero, incisively rhythmical, and the Tarantella (from a sacred part-song for women's voices, which Britten's mother sang to him as a youth) were musically propolled in their melodic treatment and in their harmonic assertion to its codal ending, all cheerful and joyous. This work, published in 1938, was choreographed for presentation that year by the London Ballet. This was a fine presentation of a work that is rarely heard, and, therefore, most appreciated. Georges Enesco's "Rumanian Rhapsody No.

2," which opened the program, is a sure-fire

material, exploiting

folksongs and dance tunes, each following the other in rapid succession. Its exotic musical content and its exciting contrasts and climaxes were most emphatically brought out in the 624-6476

and harp, in a peroration of playing. WET' YOUR WHISTLE AT HOTEL

News Brief

TAX FORMS AVAILABLE

Assemblyman Henry J. Mello has announced that California personal income tax forms are now available at his district offices.

Mello, vice chairperson of the Assembly Revenue and Taxation Committee, has alerted taxpayers to several state tax law amendments passed by the Legislature last year.

He invites persons to call or visit his offices for information on these changes. Mello's Peninsula office is at 1200 Aguajito in Monterey. Telephone requests for forms may be made by calling 373-0773.

208 AREA EXPANDED

The State Water Quality Resources Control Board has approved the expansion of the 208 Water Quality study area to include all of Monterey County, AMBAG President Sam Farr announced recently.

The 208 area previously included all of Santa Cruz County and only portions of Monterey County. Expansion of the area will allow the study to reflect accurately the overall water quality situation for both counties and will return the planning in south Monterey County, previously done by the State, to local control, Farr said.

A series of public workshops have been scheduled to receive citizen's comments on the first phase of the 208 Water Quality Program. In Montercy, the skhop is set for March 7 at 7:30 p.m. in the Monterey Public Library. For more information on these workshops, call Kati Corsaut at AMBAG, 373-8477.

BANK OFFERS SCHÖLARSHIPS

Competition for $295,000 in cash awards is underway in Bank of America's two annual scholarship programs.

Some 300,000 graduating seniors from high schools throughout the state are vying for $210,000 in the 29th Achievement Awards program, and more than 160,000 second-year students from 101 community colleges are competing for $85,000 in the 24th Community College Awards program.

High school faculty committees are selecting top students in the areas of fine arts, liberal arts, science and mathematics, and vocational arts. Individual school winners compete Mar. 24 with students from neighboring schools and these zone winners will move on to five regional finals. The top 20 finalists win $1,000 each. Second and third place winners each receive $750 and $500 while all other finalists receive $250.

In the Community College Awards program, top students are being selected to represent their schools in business, science-engineering, social science-humanities, and technical-vocational. These students will compete Mar. 23 in area events and the winners will move on to the finals Apr. 22 in San Francisco. Finalists in each field will earn top awards of $2,000 each. Second place students win $1,000 each and third place winners receive $500. All other finalists earn $250.

Council agenda

The council's proposal for the regulation of tour buses, as well as control of vehicle size and camper parking on Scenic Drive will highlight the month's first city council meeting, to be held Tuesday at 8 p.m. in City Hall Chambers.

Other matters on the agenda include:

-Ammendment of the present fire sprinkler requirements for public buildings.

—Inclusion of recreation facilities in the master plan proposal for Forest Theater.

-Reinstituting former practice of expense allowance for council members.

-Two public hearings: an appeal by Taj Gallery of a planning commission denial for a display case, and a hearing on a music studio proposal by Guy and Vivian Horn of Santa Fe and 5th Streets.

BROWN BAG PROGRAM

Distribution of brown bag vegetables to senior citizens in Monterey County has been discontinued until spring.

The announcement was made by Charles Merrifield, Food and Nutrition Program, Coordinator for the Community Services Department, who said that discontinuance is usual at this time of year because of a scarcity of produce.

The department plans to have improved warehouse space by spring which will allow for more even distribution of a variety of produce.

Merrifield emphasized the success of the program which distributed 156 tons of fresh produce to 2,700 seniors last year. The products came from Salinas Valley growers and ship-

Recipients are all members of Experience Inc. of Monterey County, a non-profit organization that controls distribution of the vegetables.

The program has become nationally known and is the model for similar projects in other areas.

Forest Theater

Views of exactly what can and should be done to the old theater vary. Tyler would like to see more year-round use of the facilities and he hopes to be able to support attempts on the part of dramatic groups to use the theater more.

At the same time, city forester Greg D'Ambrosio will be bringing up the inclusion of a passive recreation area in the southern- half of the property. His request for shuffle board courts or picnic tables for the grounds will come up at next Tuesday's city council meeting.

Whatever the future, the city is now talking positively about Forest Hill Park. unlike some periods in the past when the Forest Theater-in-the-Ground was regarded more as just a hole in the ground.

PEBBLE BEACH

On Sombria Road

You know where that big trap is right in the middle of Cypress Point's 4th fairway? Well, it's 312 yards off the blue tees, and few golfers can reach it even with a following wind. But if you threaded a 5-iron through the trees at right angles from that spot, you would land right on the deck of one of Pebble Beach's most interesting new homes.

Now almost finished (figure March 15) by one of the area's leading builders, this 3000 square foot home looks like it grew there. Nestled below a series of terraces, it stands on a rustic two acres below Sombria Road, and is reached by a gently curving drive. Its shake roof and redwood-stained exterior cover 5 gables which contain 3 bedrooms, 2½ baths, efficiently designed all-electric kitchen, laundry room, dining room, living room and library. Almost every room gives access to the flying decks that overlook views of the ocean, golf course, pines and deer.

The entry hall and service areas are paved in attractive ceramic tile. All other areas are covered in deep, soft, velour-like creamy carpet, except the library. There you find a polished oak parquet floor, reflecting the light of a giant fireplace. Another warms the 25 x 20 living room.

It's a long house, over 100 feet, so heat is supplied from individual electric furnaces in each room, each with its own thermostat — selective heating in these energy-short times. Every ceiling — in every room — is 2-inch thick knotty pine, left natural, crossed by 4 x 12 dark-stained fir beams. Accents of this same dark stain mark the cabinets and doors which serve every part of the house. Walls throughout are white, which established a distinguished blending of creamy floors, dark woodwork, natural ceilings and dark beams all over.

Examine any part: quality! Sunken tubs, gold bathroom fixtures, copper plumbing, basement storage (or wine cellar), automatic garage doors, skylighted kitchen, parking for 8 cars. If you can think of anything you don't find . . . the builder will tell you why it's not there. An

Rancho Rio Vista Home Invites Discovery

The door at the end of the walkway invites discovery of unsuspected surprises such as the niche in the entry for display of a favorite plant, picture or heirloom. Next happy discovery is that you are in an artist's two-story home containing 4,000 sq. ft. of adaptable space — sitting room in master bedroom suite could be a bedroom — so could the studio. Lower level outside entrances invite additional discovery of adaptable uses.

The living room, above, has a built-in banquette around, the fireplace, plank floors, indirect lighting and extends to a dining area. Also on this floor is kitchen, laundry, large tile-floored family room with bar (could be formal dining room), powder room and master bedroom suite. Downstairs are three bedrooms, three baths and studio.

The most delightful discovery is a big sundeck, sheltered on two sides by the house, with a swimming pool backed by natural forest on a secluded acre site. There are other unsuspected surprises. We invite you to discover them.
